My whole, although an useful fruit. We neither bake nor boil; But you ll be put in mind of it, By corn, and wine, and oil. My first is a thing of the quadruped kind, But whether domestic or wild, A guesser of charades will easily find; And it often is seen with a child. My seconds a vowel, which you must find out; My third is composed of a bone: Yet the tusk which is known to be polished and stout, In this third has been frequently known. My wholes the cessation of sorrow and care, Where the weary will always find rest; And oft has it proved a relief to despair, Which arose from the griefs of the breast. CHARADE XXXI. If, ladies, ye my first would know, You ll find me in a gentle blow; All...
