Excerpt: . . . GRATITUDE; LOVE; LIFE SEPTEMBER GRATITUDE WITHOUT knowing the final goal, we cannot take the first step toward it--at least consciously; and so, for the satisfactory work of teachers, 1 shall give an outline of the thought on which this series of lessons is based. Three facts must be borne in mind: First, that spiritual truth in the abstract is beyond a little child's comprehension; second, he must experience something of what is given him, or it is of little value; third, he sees in creation the embodied thoughts of God. Above all, our work is to cultivate religious feelings and desires rather than religious ideas. The underlying aim in the lessons of the next three months is to develop a feeling of gratitude. Some one has said that in the present time the grateful spirit is the rare one; and yet gratitude is the...
