Excerpt: . . . a little boy (who was her only child), begged Florence, and Edith, to come and see a pretty little rabbit, which he intended to send, as a present, to Florence: they were both so delighted with this little pet-rabbit, which was very tame, that they wished to carry it home with them, but Mamma said it would be very troublesome, to carry it all that way in their hands, and, as the little fellow promised to take it to Mrs. Campbell in a basket, the very next morning, they reluctantly left it behind them. Just as they turned into the Green Lane, that led to the house; they were met by Mr. Campbell, who had come out to look for them; his wife took his arm, and while they sauntered slowly towards the gate, the two little girls ran a race, to see which of them should get there first, to hold it open for them. After tea, Herbert was brought down, to see his Papa, and have a game of play, with his cousin; and when he had gone to bed, the little girls were allowed to work with Mrs. Campbell, for an hour, while Mr. Campbell read to them, the History of Sandford and Merton. Then both the children said their prayers, and were taken up to bed. This is the manner in which Edith spent several days, and, but, for the sad accounts, which daily came, of her Mamma's...
