But I don t know him myself, said Edgar; he told a fellow about his flies, who told Tim: that s the way I heard of them. Will you introduce us, Forde? asked Captain Bohun. I am sorry I am not acquainted with the individual, said Mr. Forde, throwing him VOL. I. H self on the grass just at the feet of Constance. I am the only person competent to introduce you, said Constance. I am on bowing, almost on speaking terms with Master Barlow, who, by the bye, is not much older than Edgar;, his mother is a very old gossip of mine. I shall be so much obliged to you, said Captain Bohun. Constance tried to find out whether he was looking at Isabel; but he was leaning against a tree turning over the flies in his book, and as far as she could judge not even thinking of any thing else. Bohun, are you likely to be ordered abroad this autumn? asked Mr. Forde. Not that I know of, he replied. There, that s a brown hackle! said Edgar, stopping his hand. Thatis--genuine, said Captain Bohun. Do you think Colonel Bohun would retire if your, regiment was sent out of the country again? said Mr. Forde. Nosaid Captain Bohun, with a slight laugh, nothing would ever make him retire; he is so fond of his profession. Which is not...
